

Jim Rogers

Jim Rogers is an experienced construction industry trainer and educator that stresses the importance of integrating safety, quality and productivity into all operations. Jim is currently an Instructor for LinkedIn Learning (formerly Lynda.com) where he creates and delivers on-line courses in construction management topics including planning, risk, safety, lean construction, digital workflows, and productivity. These courses have been viewed on-line by hundreds of thousands of users worldwide. Jim's industry experience includes many years in various roles within the construction industry as well as extensive work with industry trade associations creating training and certification programs. Jim was a faculty member at Arizona State University (ASU) where he taught undergraduate and graduate courses in construction management and created the University's OSHA Training Institute Education Center. Jim continues to work with industry in consulting roles and focuses on the transformation of traditional paper-based process to digital workflows.