THE STORY OF FILM FRIENDLY

More than a decade after the release of "Hope Floats", Smithville continues to get visitors who want to see the house where lead character Birdee Pruitt found refuge from her broken marriage and the downtown backdrop where she rekindled her romance with Justin Matise.

It's tourism like this, where Smithville plays a leading character in a large-scale film, that led a group of its citizens on a quest to make Smithville the premiere small-town filming destination in Texas.

In January 2008, only five days after the introduction of the state program, Smithville was named the first Film Friendly Community in Texas by the Texas Film Commission. The Smithville Music & Film Commission (SMFC) was created in 2008 shortly after filming wrapped for "The Tree of Life."

The Film Friendly designation and the dedication of the SMFC, its volunteers and the City of Smithville to assist filmmakers in creating their vision, have made Smithville a destination for filmmakers.

The "can do" attitude and friendliness of the town's citizens have kept filmmakers coming back and spreading the word about Smithville, Texas as a premiere film friendly community.
