Underground Railroad

The Farmingdale Presbyterian Church graciously opened their doors for our May 21st program. Over 70 people came to hear about five Underground Railroad conductors from the Farmingdale area, and after enjoying snacks after the program, many drove to the nearby cemetery where markers have been placed to remember these brave souls.

John C. Ackerman, Recorder of Deeds in Tazewell County, spoke about the four routes slaves took through Illinois, looking for freedom, and the slow, treacherous journey that was required. The conductors, too, quietly helped in the dark of night, knowing they would be imprisoned for a minimum of six months and fined $1000 if caught. Ackerman, who served on the Illinois Legislature's Task Force, announced that the recommendation to form a statewide commission passed both the Senate and the House and is awaiting the Governor's signature. The goals are to connect the many known pieces of information about the Underground Railroad, track where markers have been placed, and create programs and curriculum.

Susan Helm then shared information about the history of the settlement of Farmingdale when 52 New Englanders came to the area in October 1833 after a ten-week journey from upstate New York. Many were abolitionists. Reverend Billious Pond served as their pastor during the journey.

Five men later became Underground Railroad Conductors: Billious Pond

(whose son had been accused of helping slaves and through the help of Lincoln and Herndon was found not guilty – the Lincoln Herndon law partnership charged $5 for their work), Thomas Galt (from Pennsylvania who became the first pastor of the Farmingdale Church), Stephen Child (a teacher who was known to take slaves as far as sixty miles at night to their next stop), Dr. John Lyman (from New Hampshire who was an Army surgeon in the War of 1812), and Jay Slater (from Massachusetts, whose home still stands). A marker was also presented to Anna Stone, current owner of the Slater home.

Seventeen of the settlers signed the document opposing slavery issued by Elijah P. Lovejoy. Lyman, Child, and Pond attended Lovejoy's 1837 anti-slavery convention in Alton, Illinois.

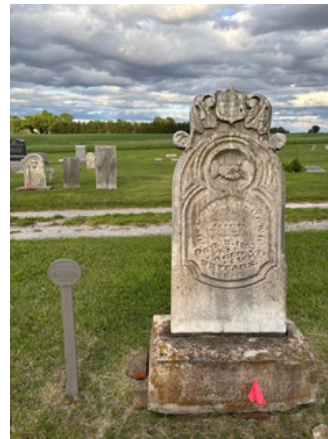

Our thanks to Farmingdale Church pastor, Steve Smith, for welcoming us into their church that is 191 years old.

On the second floor of the Sangamon County Courthouse, a new area has been designed to hold art and history. The Sangamon County Historical Society will be displaying items at various times in the large glass display cases. Thanks to Board member Stephanie Martin, the first display of all buildings that were Sangamon County Courthouses is now on exhibit. At a reception on May 13, Board members Stephanie Martin, Kathy Hoffmann, Linda Schneider, and Cinda Klickna attended. The Chair of the Sangamon County Board thanked the work of the Society. The exhibit will be on display for six months. The next exhibit will focus on items made in Sangamon County.
