

Fires and Explosions from Deep-Pit Manure Pumping

Caleb Voigt, Certified Fire Investigator, IAAI-CFI, RAM Mutual Ins. Co.

Loss Prevention/Loss Investigation

John Neal, Attorney, NAFI-CFEI, Willenbring, Dahl, Wocken & Zimmermann, PLLC

October is National Fire Prevention Month. This article addresses one of the larger risks the membership faces, namely fire and explosion losses in livestock-confinement facilities. Many of these facilities engage in deep-pit manure pumping in the fall. Accordingly, this article coincides with Fire Prevention Month.

Deep-pit manure pumping presents a number of dangers, which if not properly addressed can result in not only property damage claims, but third-party liability claims. Given the value of the property at stake and the catastrophic losses that can result, it is important to be mindful of the risks associated with deep-pit manure pumping.

Deep-pit facilities are those that use a six to twelve-foot deep pit for manure storage. Liquid manure, located in these pits, contain at least four main gases as a result of decomposition: Hydrogen Sulfide, Methane, Ammonia, and Carbon Dioxide. Agitating or disturbing the pit during pumping can release any number of these gases.

While Hydrogen Sulfide can create asphyxiation issues, methane creates explosion and fire hazards. According to the Occupation Health and Safety Administration (OSHA), Methane is the primary ingredient of natural gas, which signifies its dangers. Methane has an LEL (lower explosion limit) of 5% and an UEL (upper explosion limit) of 15% at room temperature. A concentration of 5% methane in air is equivalent to 50,000 ppm. A methane concentration of 10% of its LEL, which would be 5,000 ppm in air, creates an IDLH (immediately dangerous to life and health) situation to humans as well as livestock. Thus, even a low concentration of methane to air can create a hazard. Furthermore, Methane is an odorless, colorless gas. So, its presence can go undetected without the use of specialized gas monitors.

Since methane (0.668 kg/m^3) is lighter than air (1.205 kg/m^3) it rises and can spread long distances. According to the National Hog Farmer (Sept. 20, 2012), “[t]he rate of gas release from the manure can be drastically increased when the manure is agitated (stirred) during pumping.” Thus, distant ignition and flashback are possible.

Erin Cortus, Extension Engineer with the The University of Minnesota Extension, recommends that farmers take a number of precautionary measures prior to and during manure agitation and pumping. E. Cortus, Protocols and preparation for manure agitation and pumping, Univ. of Minn. Extension, <https://extension.umn.edu/manure-safety/protocols-and-preparation-manure-agitation-and-pumping>. These precautionary measures include, but are not limited to: (1) evacuating all people from the facility (and animals if possible) during pumping; (2) extinguishing ignition sources prior to and during pumping; (3) placing warning signs at entrances of the building; and (4) ensuring a proper ventilation strategy. Id.

Ted Funk, professor emeritus at the University of Illinois, recommends that “[a]ll livestock farms should develop an emergency response plan” to better prepare for an event. M. Blum, Safety first when pumping manure, AgriNews (Apr. 8, 2017). Preparation includes, but is not limited to, notifying fire and rescue departments that the farm has a confined space and ensuring emergency contacts, such as fire and rescue, are readily accessible by phone in the event of an emergency. Id.

In sum, pit pumping is around the corner for many farmers insured through the MAFMIC membership. Understanding and appreciating the dangers associated with pit pumping and taking precautionary steps is paramount to the safety of persons, property, and animals.

Mr. Voigt is a Certified Fire Investigator (CFI) through the International Association of Arson Investigators (IAAI). He investigates fire and explosion losses, among other things, for RAM Mutual Insurance Company and its member companies. He is also a Lieutenant/EMT with the City of Rice Fire Department.

Mr. Neal is an Attorney with the law firm of Willenbring, Dahl, Wocken & Zimmermann, PLLC. He handles fire and explosion claims for the MAFMIC membership. He is also a Certified Fire and Explosion Investigator (CFEI) and Certified Fire Investigator Instructor (CFII) through the National Association of Fire Investigators (NAFI). He has been appointed to serve as a Principal on the National Fire Protection Association (NFPA) Technical Committee for Fire Investigation Units. He is a Firefighter with the Albertville Fire Department and a member of the Wright County Fire Investigation Unit.

Mental Health and the Farmer

Blessings and burdens: The struggles of being a farmer

From hay baling to calving to planting, farming is hard physical labor from sunup to sundown. But what many don't take into consideration is how emotionally difficult it can be. Managing a working farm can lead to depression, anxiety, marital strife, financial ruin, and addiction. In fact, the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention puts suicide rates at about 32 people per 100,000.

A tough row to hoe

Farmers are used to facing tough times. The Great Depression began for farmers shortly after World War I and continued through the 1920s, hitting farming families hard with soaring machinery costs and rapidly descending farm prices. Despite this, farmer suicides didn't get much attention until the 1980s farm crisis, which resulted from two droughts, a national economy in trouble, and a government ban on grain exports to the Soviet Union. Since then, the suicide rate for male farmers has remained very high: nearly two times that of the general population.

Signs of depression in farmers

- Irritability
- Fatigue
- Lack of interest in activities or work
- Expressions or feelings of worthlessness
- Nausea
- Muscle cramps
- Clammy skin

Leading causes of depression for farmers

- Addiction. The strong link between excessive alcohol consumption and depression is well-documented, and self-medication — whether with alcohol or drugs — can be a coping mechanism for struggling farmers. Loneliness, isolation, and the stress of juggling a farm, family, and finances also contribute to depression and anxiety.
- Debt. When a farm struggles because of weather, family crises, or overall poor financial management, hopelessness or panic can set in, resulting in increased physical and emotional illness.
- Divorce. Farmers and their families have to sustain land, livestock, expensive equipment, and finances, all while balancing the work with home life. During parts of the year, farming is a 24/7, seven-day-a-week job. These demanding conditions can make agricultural occupations particularly difficult and can take a toll on marriages. The psychological impact of divorce can also lead to depression and suicidal thoughts.

Mental Health and the Farmer

Submitted by Dan McCue, Grinnell Mutual

- Injury or illness. Agriculture is hard physical labor, so it's not uncommon for farmers to injure themselves or skip a doctor's appointment because it's harvest time. Unfortunately, those injuries and illnesses can stack up until they become incapacitating or impossible to ignore, leading to lost time on the farm, financial burden, and then to depression and anxiety.

Mental health resources for farmers

Fortunately, treatments for addiction, mental illness, and resources to improve your financial well-being are constantly evolving and improving. If you need help or know of someone who needs help, reach out.

A Perspective on Interest Rates

Alex Coulter, Senior Financial Associate, Schluchter Investment Group

Over the past 12 months, there has been a significant change in interest rates. In the fourth quarter of 2018, the 10-year U.S. Treasury was yielding around 3.20%. As of August 13th 2019, the 10-year Treasury bond yielded 1.68%. In July 2019, the Federal Reserve took action to cut interest rates by 0.25%, the first time it has lowered rates since 2008. The Federal Reserve's action to cut rates, as well as concerns over global recessions have continues to drive interest rates lower.

It is important to remember that there is an inverse relationship between bond yields and the market price of bonds. For example, when bond yields in the market go down, the market price of bonds increases. Managers and Directors of Mutual Insurance Companies may have noticed the impact of low interest rates on the overall value of bonds in the Mutual Insurance Company's investment portfolio.

In addition to the lowering of interest rates, we have seen the yield curve continue to flatten and even become slightly inverted. With a traditional yield curve, interest rates increase as the maturity term increases. For example, a rational investor would expect to earn a higher interest rate purchasing a bond maturing in 10 years than they would earn on a bond maturing in 2 years. Currently, the treasury yield curve is extremely flat. On 8/13/2019, the 2-year US Treasury bond was yielding 1.67%. On the same date, the 10-Year Treasury bond was yielding 1.68%.

The current interest rate environment, as well as the recent tax law changes for Mutual Insurance Companies should be discussed. It is important to review the Mutual Insurance Company's investment portfolio and bond ladder. Schluchter Investment Group is happy to meet with your board to discuss the current interest rate environment and to review the investment portfolio.

IMT Computer Services Acquires PDSpectrum Insurance Processing Platform

IMT Computer Services is excited to announce that we have acquired the PDSpectrum insurance processing platform from Priority Data.

By combining our teams and resources, we'll be able to continue investing significantly in the development and expanded feature set that it currently offers. We plan to begin integrating our existing products and services with the PDSpectrum platform. Our goal over time is to convert all existing customers using the APPS or MIPS platforms over to PDSpectrum.

PDSpectrum is a web-based, fully integrated core policy processing platform that provides underwriting, rating, billing, claims management, accounts payable, general ledger, and more to insurance carriers. Modern, web-based systems are one of the greatest needs and feature requests for Farm Mutual insurance companies as they consolidate and grow. The PDSpectrum employees will continue to operate out of their existing Omaha, Nebraska location.

We are very excited about the new opportunities this acquisition brings to our customers. If you'd like to discuss more in person, we will be at the upcoming NAMIC Convention in September and MAFMIC Short Course in November.

WOW!

APRIL 1976

Short Course 1976

1976 SPRING SHORT COURSE BROKE ALL ATTENDANCE RECORDS!

The 1976 MAFMIC Spring Short Course Education Seminar held at Alexandria, March 17-19 is now past history and reflections on the event are most pleasant. Last year, a new attendance record was set when 194 persons attended. This year's attendance was both amazing and incredible . . . exactly 306 people, including program participants, were in attendance, representing 80-plus MAFMIC member companies! And before we forget, it was most pleasing to see so many of the fairer sex registered and in attendance at the various sessions of the Seminar!

THE 2½-DAY PROGRAM was topflight and enjoyed by those in attendance, judging from many verbal and written compliments of the delegates. Arrowwood Lodge proved to be an ideal meeting place with its elegant sleeping rooms, spacious meeting facilities and excellent meals. This leaves just one question now. If the word gets around, and another top program is offered . . . what can we expect in the way of attendance in 1977???

CLIFF JOHNSON AND ROBERT SPOLYAR were unable to participate on this year's program due to deaths in their immediate families. Cliff's father-in-law passed away at Esko after a lengthy illness. Cliff is President of Reinsurance Association of Minnesota. Spolyar's father passed away after returning to Indianapolis from Mayo Clinic, Rochester. Robert Spolyar is Vice-president of NAMIC's Legislative Services. Larry Forrester, Vice-President of the National Association, flew to Minneapolis and drove to Alexandria where he did a creditable job of filling in for Mr. Spolyar.

JIM FABER, fire safety fieldman for RAM, was in charge of taking pictures at the Short Course in addition to many other duties. The following pictures were supplied by him.
