APPE Mentoring Panel

Mentorship and mentoring means different things to different people. It is highly contextual and adaptable depending on situation, research focus, and the shared goals of mentors and mentees. Mentoring is not a one-way street but beneficial for mentors and mentees as a dynamic process of professional formation and growth. Successful mentoring relationships focus efforts around common goals, usually centered on the mentee's career advancement and professional development. However, mentors also benefit from mentoring experiences through mutual goal formation and realization, shared learning, and leadership development. Universities and professional societies approach mentoring differently. Some organizations prefer a formal matching program where others have less structure, enabling mentoring relationships to emerge organically. Mentoring and mentorship experiences are not a monolith. Mentoring relationships emerge and develop in distinctive ways, some formal and other less prescribed and more organic. However, mentoring as a practice needs organizational support, blueprints on best practices, accountability and oversight mechanisms, and pathways for rewards and recognition.

Attend the Annual APPE Mentorship Panel to learn more about the lived mentorship experiences of three mentor-mentee pairs spanning the mentee archetype of graduate student, post-doc, and early career scholar. Through conversation, the panel will:

- Distinguish between supervisors and mentors
 - Explore how the roles of mentor and mentee evolve
 - Acknowledge the need for multiple mentors and mentorship mapping
 - Review how to seek feedback and how to share it

Discretion: A Case for Increasing the Power of Bureaucrats

Dr. Barry Lam, Philosophy Professor at UC Riverside, Associate Director at Marc Sanders Foundation, and Executive Producer of Hi-Phi Nation podcast

In this talk, Dr. Barry Lam will be making the case that we should give more, not less, discretionary power to those who are in charge of implementing and enforcing rules in a firm or society. These are people like police officers, prosecutors, judges, and also doctors, nurses, and everyday workers. The argument rests on a case against Legalism, the political philosophy that job titles, roles, rules, laws, policies, and procedures must be detailed, explicit, and blindly administered to ensure an efficiently functioning and fair society. Instead, Dr. Lam's view is that basic tenets of what makes for a good person and a society of good people requires that we build into rules and regulation the ability for people in charge of those rules to ignore or bend them.

Sponsored by the Rutland Institute of Ethics.

a new future
and build capacity to resolve unanticipated ethical conundrums.

WHAT IS...

...our Ethical Lens Inventory™ reminds learners of their own value priorities and helps them recognize ethical diversity and the resulting policy differences.

WHAT COULD BE...

...our Ethics Exercises™ stretch learners toward ideals as they learn to respect people with different ethical perspectives and reach across the value divide.

WHAT CAN BE...

...our Hot Topics Simulations™ teach learners to imagine the future as they harmonize values to resolve ethical tensions so individuals and communities can thrive.

Your learners face an uncertain world. Using EthicsGame simulations in your class can empower them to use their imagination, teach them to ask the right questions, and help them develop moral courage as they become effective leaders.
