KEY STRATEGIES FOR CULTIVATING INTRAPRENEURS ON YOUR TEAM

Entrepreneurialism has become the zeitgeist of modern culture. While many admire key aspects of the entrepreneurial spirit, most individuals in the United States are actually employees. According to the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development, only about 7% of the U.S. population can be defined as an entrepreneur among the employed. Does that mean that only those who are on their own can embody the skills of entrepreneurialism? Not at all. In fact, many corporate cultures foster their own internal entrepreneurial, or intrapreneur, programs with their current employees. You can adapt an intrapreneur program for your organization and it could be a great thing for both your employees and your business. Here are five key strategies for cultivating intrapreneurs on your own team.
